When winds among the blighted bowers Began of coming snows to talk, I found a patch of golden flowers One morning in my woodland walk; And all that day my heart was light, For a soft whisper said to me, Will not the leve that keepeth bright These little ones, provide for thee?

Once when the clouds were full of rain, And dark to deeper darkness grew, A wild bird fluttered at my pane And sung to me the long night through Forgetting how the sky was blur With rainy shadows cold and gray, I sat and listened to my bird, Till the broad cast grow white with day.

In a lone desert place I sat-The earth was hot, and hot the air Far as the eye could reach, one flat, Low reach of dry sands everywhere, But when my strength was almost spent And sight to wavering darkness fell, Lo the cool shadow of a tent, And the soft murmur of a well.

Then said I, looking back on all My fears, be still, my heart, be still! The cyll hour could never fall Were there no power beyond the iii! My foolish fears within me died, The clouds were lit with rainbow gleams, And the hot desert, far and wide, Lay like a garden in my dreams
